

The Boston Globe

Monday, April 7, 2008

Health/Science Calendar

Through April 26

Animal imagery

Stunning photographs of species endangered by global warming are the focus of an exhibit at the Peerless Building, 150 Union St., in Providence.

The show, titled "Irreplaceable: Wildlife in a Warming World," is part of a national campaign by groups such as Earthjustice and the International League of Conservation Photographers, to bring more attention to creatures struggling to adapt to a changing climate.

Go to irreplaceablewild.org.

IN DANGER -- Animals threatened by global warming - including sea turtles such as these from Tahiti - are the subject of a new photo exhibit titled "Irreplaceable: Wildlife in a Warming World." The gender of sea turtle eggs is determined by temperature, so global warming would upset the natural gender balance. (Michele Westmoreland)